BETTER THAN PRE-WAR

BRITISH DYE OUTPUT

LONDON, July 13. (By International News Service.)—"The present output of the British dye industry exceeds the total pre-war consumption." This was the statement made by Sir H. Birchenough, chairman of the British Dye Stuffs corporation, in a review of the industry at the annual general meeting of the corporation. "Consumers have the right to ask that supples from other countries shall only be imported under a system which will guarantee that the danger of complete or even partial foreign monopoly shall not reappear." The chairman said there was still a great shortage and that the United States could supply certain classes of dyes, but that the exchange conditions and present prices in the British market prevented this relief.
